ABSTRACT

This directory is a compendium of over 600 scholars and educators in a range of disciplines throughout the United States who are actively involved in research or teaching of rural issues. It is intended as a resource for those individuals and for other professionals, providing access to one another and aiding a multi-disciplinary approach to rural issues. Each of the alphabetically arranged entries contains: name; professional affiliation, address and phone number; and specialties. Specialties include rural education, rural development, rural sociology, rural demography, rural economics, local government, water quality, community development, agricultural policy, farm population and employment, Southern and rural history, family, land use, natural resources, and environmental issues. An index of names, arranged by state, is also included. (SV)

INTRODUCTION

The Directory of Rural Studies Scholars and Educators is a joint publication of the National Rural Studies Committee and the Rural Information Center at the National Agricultural Library. The compilation has been overseen by Carol S. Hatch, a doctoral student at Oregon State University and research associate to the National Rural Studies Committee.

The National Rural Studies Committee has been made possible by a grant from the W. K. Kellogg Foundation to Oregon State University. It is a multi-disciplinary group of scholars drawn from several universities and research organizations. Its purpose is to evaluate social problems in the rural United States and the capacity of higher education to do research and education on those problems.

This directory is a compendium of scholars and educators in a range of disciplines throughout the nation who are actively involved in research of rural issues or in teaching. It is intended to serve as a resource for those individuals and for other professionals, providing access to one another and aiding a multi-disciplinary approach to rural issues.

The listing is the result of recommendations from rural studies educators and scholars in a variety of disciplines throughout the United States and from National Rural Studies Committee members.
